Brief version of final proposal but must include complete curricular design, listing course requirements. A thorough estimate of all necessary costs required to implement the program and the status of required faculty resources should also be stated clearly. Indeed, the proposed program should be well along in the planning process, with the clear understanding of the College’s ability to offer the program, before the LOI is submitted to the Office of Academic Affairs.

I. PURPOSE AND GOALS

II. Purpose succinctly: audience doesn’t have expertise in the field of study.

III. Explicit statement of the educational goals and career objectives for students

Issues to address are national local educational trends, faculty interest and commitment, program’s relation to existing departmental or college offerings, other compelling factors leading to development of program

Purpose

The purpose of this program is to provide professional certification in all languages certified in New York State other than French, Italian, and Spanish. (Queens College already has an MS Ed for professional certification in French, Italian, and Spanish). The foreign language faculty members in SEYS want to provide professional certification as well as professional development for teachers already certified in other languages in New York State. Interested individuals in the New York City and Metro area need a central location to provide access to such a program. We are also hopeful that we may draw a larger audience from the eastern US by eventually offering study for potential candidates from the eastern US using hybrid courses. The current program is entirely comprised of in-person courses.

The program will be structured as a cutting edge graduate curriculum and instruction program designed for practicing teachers who a) want to expand their teaching, reflective, and standards-based curriculum and assessment skills; b) have expanded roles in mentoring teachers and curriculum development, and/or c) who want to prepare for district-level curriculum oversight and development positions.

Rationale of the program

Teachers already initially certified in languages other than French, Italian, and Spanish in the New York City and Metro area would benefit from such a program because it allows them to gain their professional certification and improve their professional teaching, curricular, and assessments skills. Teachers who already have professional or permanent certification (including French, Italian, and Spanish) would also benefit from a program that provides access to best practices in designing curriculum, standards-based assessment and teaching, and action research to expand reflective and professional skills. The latter group of teachers this program may apply the credits of a second degree to meet the salary differential teachers receive after earning 30 credits above the Masters degree.

The current MS Ed program in foreign languages at Queens College consists of 15 credits of graduate language courses and 18 credits of graduate coursework in foreign language education. Queens College only offers graduate language coursework in French, Italian, and Spanish, so only teachers initially certified in those three languages can currently obtain the MS Ed and professional certification. The world language education faculty, however, want to provide professional certification as well as professional development for teachers who are already initially or provisionally certified by New York State in languages other than French, Italian, and Spanish. This program will be structured as a graduate curriculum and instruction program with no language components required. A requirement for admission to the program is to have strong language content.
preparation. We propose a separate degree, the M. Ed, to distinguish this program from the MS Ed.

Educational goals and career objectives for students

This program will provide professional certification for our candidates who already have teaching jobs in New York City, Westchester, and Long Island, as well as candidates from the eastern US. Candidates who complete this program will be prepared with state-of-the-art skills to teach language, to create standards-based curricula and assessments, and to develop and revamp school language programs with strong articulation from levels K-12. Our graduates will also have skills to work with curriculum, assessment, and program coordination at the school or district level.

Evidence of the need for teachers of other languages in the area consists of a survey that was distributed in late September 200- (YEAR) to school districts with representatives in Long Island Language Teachers (LILT). Responses were received from 13 school districts in Long Island (9 in Nassau County, 4 in Suffolk County). Two districts reported they had Chinese programs established-1 at the K-4 Level and one at the secondary level. Three districts reported they wanted to expand their Chinese offerings but had difficulty finding teachers to staff positions. Eleven districts responded they would like to offer Chinese in the future, two districts wanted to add Arabic to their offerings, and one district wanted to offer Japanese. These results indicate that there will be jobs available for teachers of Chinese in particular. All districts indicated they had difficulty finding qualified teachers for languages offered in their schools, collectively Spanish, American Sign Language, Japanese, Latin, French, and German.

An additional feature of the program will be the Foreign Language in the Elementary School extension course that is optional among the choices. The state requires one course that extends our baseline secondary certification down to Kindergarten. We have had numerous interest in providing this at the college, particularly for teachers in Long Island Schools. This course is listed below in the choices, SEYSW 703.

National and Local Educational Trends

Activity across the country shows interest in learning critical languages and was one motivation to develop this program. Events such as 9/11, conflicts in the Middle East, as well as emerging economically and politically powerful countries in the East, Middle East, and other areas of the globe clarify the necessity to study critical and other languages for commercial and political reasons in US schools.

An indicator of this nationwide interest in expanding language awareness is the National Security Language Initiative (NSLI) of 2006, with the goal of increasing US citizens’ studies of critical need foreign languages including Arabic, Chinese, Russian, Hindi, Farsi, and others from kindergarten through university. Included in this initiative were grants for critical language development through the U.S. Department of Education, the U.S. Department of State, The U.S. Department of Defense, & The Office of the Director of National Intelligence. The focus of these grants includes teacher certification programs, teaching materials development, and elementary language programs.

Rationale of the program

Queens College has language offerings at the graduate level in only French, Italian, and Spanish. The foreign language education faculty, however, want to provide professional certification as well as professional development for teachers who are already initially or provisionally certified in other languages (other than French, Italian, and Spanish) with New York State.
This program compliments Goal 1 of the Queens College Strategic Plan, Advance Academic Programs a) with the plan to offer strong language programs for Arabic, Chinese, Hindi, Japanese, Korean, and Spanish and “educate prospective teachers in language pedagogies” (p. 7). The program also compliments Goal 1 to “Ensure that our undergraduate and graduate teacher education programs are national leaders...” (p. 9). The program will compliment these goals because it provides cutting edge advancements in curriculum, assessment, research, cultural pedagogy, and program design that provides in-depth development well beyond what is possible in the current model of 15 credits in education in the MSED programs.

Faculty commitment:

Another motivation for developing this program is the faculty conviction about the importance of learning to communicate across cultural and language barriers through language study given Queens College’s location in one of the most diverse counties in the country.

The Queens College foreign language education faculty members have expertise preparing language teachers for 7-12 programs. These faculty members have also kept abreast of the latest developments in the language teaching field and integrate these developments into their teaching practice and as content in language pedagogy courses. Our candidates in the program will be equipped with the knowledge and skills to design standards-based, interdisciplinary, and articulated K-12 curriculum; standards-based assessments based on best practices in the field; knowledge of meeting the common core standards; and to develop teaching materials that are standards-based and integrate knowledge of educational learning theory and diversity.

Relation to existing departmental or college offerings

French, Italian, and Spanish teachers will not be allowed to apply without professional or permanent certification or a present MA or MSED in the language to avoid competition with the established MSED programs in French, Italian, and Spanish. French, Italian, and Spanish teachers who already attained professional or permanent certification or who have an MA or MSED in the language, however, will be eligible to apply for the program.

The program incorporates six credits of offerings that can be selected from the secondary literacy program, the special education program, or the bilingual extension program. Representatives from these programs have agreed to allow our students to take these courses. There is an additional cognate course that can be taken outside the Division of Education from another CUNY school that has graduate offerings in the language or as a study abroad component. Study abroad components are strongly encouraged among NCATE accredited programs. This cognate will be determined in consultation with an advisor.

The program will offer professional certification for completers of the Chinese Post Baccalaureate program. There is not currently an MSED provided for languages other than French, Italian, and Spanish. SEYS is also in the process of creating additional Post Baccalaureate programs in Korean, Japanese, Russian, Hebrew, and Latin, among others, and the completers of the Post Baccalaureates will have graduate programs to provide professional certification.

Cooperating teachers who receive tuition waivers for working with our student teachers and practicum students will be able to enroll in the program and use their vouchers. The program will provide these teachers with an opportunity to update their pedagogical skills and meet professional development needs.
Other compelling factors leading to development of program

The language education faculty attempted to put this program forward in 2007 but due to NCATE and reregistration of all the undergraduate certification programs we were asked to postpone our efforts until now. Increasing enrollments in critical languages, the shortage of teacher preparation programs, and the population of Queens are all factors that contributed to the development of this program.

Enrollments at all levels of education are rising in critical languages, particularly in Chinese and Arabic (Cutshall, 2007a; Sweley, 2006). Many of these teachers are not certified, because there are few teacher education programs around the country to provide needed programs. For example, a 2005 report stated there were only four Chinese language teacher education programs accredited by NCATE in the US- the University of Iowa, New York University, Ohio State University, and University of Massachusetts at Amherst (Sweley, 2006). Since then Queens College registered a Post Baccalaureate Program with New York State to provide initial certification in Chinese. There were no programs listed on the New York State web site of registered programs for Arabic certification, although SEYS is applying for a Post Baccalaureate program for Arabic certification.

The shortage of certified teachers in critical languages is another factor for developing this program. Sweley (2006) cites a 2003 report that stated approximately 24,000 K-12 students were learning Chinese. The English version of the People’s Daily Online (July 11, 2006) has an article that describes an initiative by the Confucius Institute (based in New York) to provide Chinese teachers for New York schools. The article stated that “New York has at least 2,400 elementary and secondary schools and institutions of higher learning that need Chinese teachers…. Only 270 schools have Chinese teaching staffs [sic].”

The large population of speakers of critical languages in New York City is another factor to encourage the foreign language education faculty to develop programs in these languages. The 2000 Census data reports the following figures for Asian or Pacific Islander-Chinese population in the area: New York State- 284,144; Bronx, NY- 7015, Kings, NY-68,191, New York, NY- 71,723; and Queens, NY- 86,885. Likewise,

New York City is home to the largest population of Arabs in the US. Of the 8,008,278 New York City population in 2000, 69,985 were Arab (De la Cruz & Brittingham, 2003). Arabic is the 11th most spoken language in the US (Cutshall, 2007a).

The New York City Department of Education provides language courses covered in traditional high school language courses, as well as heritage courses, language arts courses, and dual language programs beginning in kindergarten in the following: Arabic, Bengali, Chinese (Mandarin and Cantonese), French, German, Greek (Classic and Modern), Haitian Creole, Hebrew, Italian, Japanese, Korean, Latin, Polish, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish, Urdu, and Yiddish (New York City Department of Education, n.d.). Many of our candidates from the foreign language education program are hired to teach in language arts programs for heritage learners.

IV. NEED. Relevant are those of students, college, community, and economy

The mission of Queens College is “…that a great education should be accessible to talented young people of all backgrounds- ethnic and financial.” Its purpose is “…to prepare students to become leading citizens of an increasingly global society… and to embrace its special obligation to serve the larger community” (Institutional Report, 2005, p.2).
This program meets several of Queens College’s goals, such as increasing graduate student enrollments, qualifying for outside funding sources, serving our global community, as well as Goal One of the Strategic Plan for advancing academic programs. First, Queens College is attempting to increase graduate student enrollments, and this program provides a service for those groups of teachers whose needs we do not currently meet.

Second, the college offerings to professionally certify language teachers are limited to three languages at the graduate level, French, Italian, and Spanish. This is not in sync with the College’s mission to work with an increasingly global society and to meet the needs of the community. In order to expand our offerings to include teachers from other languages we need a program that does not rely on graduate language offerings in the additional languages as QC does not provide those programs, and the language departments have no current plans to offer them.

Fourth, many of our cooperating teachers were educated before the development of the standards in foreign language learning, the NCATE standards for teacher preparation, the INTASC standards for new teachers, and the NBPTS standards for experienced teachers were developed in language. This program will provide a needed vehicle for such teachers to update their pedagogical knowledge and gain curriculum development skills that more traditional foreign language education programs did not provide in the past. Other school-related personnel at the local level, private language school teachers and owners, and language teachers with the Greek Orthodox Diocese of New York are also interested in retooling and updating their pedagogical knowledge. From new courses in this program and our current MSED we will be offering professional development certificate programs to meet those professional development needs.

Finally the program compliments Goal One of Queens College’s Strategic Development Plan for 2008-2013 to strengthen academic programs in Arabic, Chinese, Hindi, Japanese, Korean, and Spanish, and to develop teacher education programs that are nationally recognized.

We surveyed school nine school districts in Nassau County and four districts in Suffolk County (N=13) they responded to what staff development needs they had for foreign language teachers. Six districts reported they need more curriculum design development (one specifically mentioned advanced curriculum design, five districts reported they need professional development on foreign language assessment, eight districts replied they need staff development for K-12 program articulation, and four replied they need foreign language certification development from Pre-K-6th grade.

We also surveyed teachers, administrators and chairs of languages and received 30 responses. Of fourteen respondents to professional development needs of teachers, thirteen indicated that assessment was needed, 13 standards-based best practices, 12 selected curriculum design, 8 chose articulation, and 5 chose methods and materials for teaching levels Pre-K-6.

V. STUDENTS.

Evidence for student interest in program and sources of potential students. Give numerical estimate of enrollments anticipated for each of the first five years of the program’s existence. Projected enrollment should be presented in a table showing how many students will attend full-time and how many part-time.

Anticipated attrition rate indicated with discussion how it was determined
General discussion include factors that led to the estimates, including student interest, employment trends and needs, enrollment in similar programs at the College or at other campuses within the University.

The SEYS department has had requests from teachers in Japanese and Latin who wanted advanced pedagogical development. We are preparing Post-Baccalaureate programs in Arabic, Hindi, Urdu, and Korean. Candidates from those programs will be potential candidates for this curriculum and instruction degree. We have current candidates who completed the graduate initial certification in Chinese who wish to enroll into the program as soon as it becomes available.

In October 2007 we received responses for two separate surveys. From the first survey, in Nassau and Suffolk County we received 14 responses from LOTE administrators. The first survey was a simple email survey sent directly to the appropriate personnel in the districts. The second survey was put on Survey Monkey and distributed to members of New York City Association of Foreign Language Teachers (NYCAFLT). The latter survey was more detailed and we received 30 responses from Westchester, Queens, Brooklyn, Staten Island and Putnam Counties consisting of 23 teachers, five department chairs, 2 assistant principals, and 4 administrators who hire LOTE teachers.

The results will be separated into trends from the two surveys.

The first finding of interest relates to languages that administrators find difficult to staff. The languages are listed following the number of responses:

- Long Island: Spanish (5), Italian (3), ASL* (1), ALL languages (2), Latin (1), and German (1).

- Responses from Other Counties in the NYC area:
  - Overwhelmingly 10 individuals reported hiring Spanish teachers that were less qualified given the difficulty of finding certified teachers. Three respondents reported difficulty Latin teachers and hiring less qualified teachers, while other individuals reported difficulty finding (2 each) qualified teachers for Hebrew, Italian, Bengali, and Japanese. One individual each reported difficulty staffing positions for the following: German, Korean, Arabic, Russian, Afrikaans, Farsi, Haitian Creole, Greek, Hindi, Mohawk, Swahili, Urdu, Polish, Punjabi, Tagalog, Ukrainian, Vietnamese, Armenian, & Dutch.
  - Respondents also reported they could not expand language offerings in different levels because of the shortage of teachers. Three individuals from Long Island were unable to expand Chinese, two Italian, and one was unable to expand French across school levels.
  - Twenty-four respondents from other counties in the NYC area suggested that if more teachers were available their schools were interested in expanding offerings in languages. Twelve respondents indicated their schools were unable to expand Chinese offerings, and six Italian. Three responses for each of the three languages reported that teacher shortages prevented expanding programs in Spanish, Arabic and Japanese. Three additional respondents reported their schools were unable to expand programs in Bengali, Green, Punjabi, and Portuguese due to the shortage of qualified teachers.
  - The respondents also addressed the languages their schools would like to offer in the future. In Long Island 11 wanted to add Chinese, two Arabic, and 1 Japanese and American Sign Language (ASL) respectively.
  - Fourteen responses from other counties in the New York area were able to provide insights into the languages that different stakeholders in their schools were interested in offering in the future. The stakeholder groups included the respondents, teachers, students, parents, and administrators. Chinese was the highest choice among all stakeholders in the schools, followed by Arabic and Japanese. (See chart in Appendix A).

The surveys provided us with the professional development needs of the respondents perceived were needed in their LOTE faculty in the schools. In the Long Island schools 8 out of 14 responses chose articulation issues, 6 selected curriculum design, 5 assessment, 4 technology, and 4 Pre-K certification.

Of fourteen respondents from other counties in the NYC area 13 indicated that assessment was needed, 13 standards-based best practices, 12 selected curriculum design, 8 chose articulation, and 5 chose methods and materials for teaching levels Pre-K-6.

VI. CURRICULUM.

Rationale for the curriculum should be presented and discussed. Complete curricular design must be included, listing all course titles with credit requirements and indicating new courses. Course descriptions are not needed in the LOI. Relevant accrediting or licensure requirements must be identified. Any non-course requirements, such as thesis or comprehensive exam should be indicated.

Articulation with other programs in the Univ. or with private colleges should be described. If articulation agreements are necessary for the implementation of the program, discussions with other colleges should have taken place before the LOI is submitted.

The program was designed by considering identified needs of urban teachers in New York (e.g. literacy and special education), core education courses currently in the MSED, ideas gained from examining other teacher education programs, reflecting on how to best guide candidates in the program to meet NCATE Standards (INTASC and NBPTS), and reflecting on critical elements missing from the current MSED programs in foreign language, such as a dedicated course for teaching culture, a focused examination of second language acquisition, and in-depth curriculum development courses.

Fifteen credits from the current MSED program in education are elements of Sections A and B of the program. Section C integrates courses from the literacy and special education programs in the college. Representatives from those two programs have expressed willingness to let us include these offerings in the program. Cognate courses such as in section D of the program are common offerings at the graduate level, and finally, the courses in section E represent areas that prior graduates of our MSED programs have targeted, that the faculty members of the SEYS foreign language faculty determined are areas of weakness in the current MSED, that appeal to the needs identified from administrators and teachers who responded to two surveys distributed in the fall of 2007, and offerings that will appeal to cooperating teachers and future candidates.

36 credits Masters of Education in Curriculum and Instruction (MEd)

Admission requirement:

- Oral Proficiency Interview score as follows:
  - Advanced Low: Candidates in German, Hebrew, Portuguese, and Russian
  - Intermediate-High: Candidates in Arabic, Chinese, Japanese, and Korean
  - Latin Teacher candidates have no OPI requirements
- Writing Proficiency Test score minimum:
  - Advanced Low: languages using the Roman alphabet
  - Intermediate High: languages that use a non-Roman alphabet or characters
• Introductory Foreign Language Specific Methods course and basic Curriculum and Assessments Course
• Exit Requirement: Portfolio meeting INTASC and NBPTS standards

A. Core Requirements (9 credits)

• 3 credits of Educational Psychology (regular offerings) e.g., 710, 718, 719
• 3 credits of Educational Foundations (strongly recommended SEYS 706 Introduction to Comparative Education)
• 3 credits: SEYS 743: Curriculum and Instruction in Foreign Language Education. Basic graduate level curriculum course. (Pre-requisites: Introductory Foreign Language Specific Methods course and basic Curriculum and Assessments Course)

B. Educational Research: (6 credits)

• SEYS 785: Seminar in Research in Foreign Language Education.
• SEYS 786: Advanced Seminar in Research in Foreign Language Education

C. Literacy and Special Education: 6 credits from the following upon consultation with the adviser:

• ECPSE 700 Foundations of Special Education
• ECPSE 740 Special Education for Diverse Learners
• SEYSL 702: Literacy in the Content Area
• SEYSL 703: Literacy Instruction for Diverse Learners
• EECE 763: Teaching of Reading and Language Arts in Bilingual Education

D. Cognate course: 3 credits (determined with advisor consultation): For example a candidate who has never been abroad to a country that uses the target language would be encouraged to go abroad and gain experience in that country with the language and culture (NCATE strongly suggests including study abroad experiences in language teacher preparation programs). Additional options are courses offered through STARTALK, a program for teachers of critical languages. These are offered during the summer and provide many options for teachers to work with others in that language.

E. Curriculum and Instruction: 12 credits from the following (SEYSW are new courses):
• EECE 763: Teaching of Reading and Language Arts in Bilingual Education.

• SEYSW 710: World Language and Cultural Learning through Classroom Interaction. An advanced study of world language teaching and diversity focusing on the social, cultural, psychological, and literacy aspects of learning another language. Major threads in the course include how language learning occurs through classroom interaction, how teachers can design classroom interaction to build communities that use the target language for instruction, and how potential mismatches in cultural differences and communication practices occur during classroom interaction.
• (New Course) SEYSW 703. Teaching Languages to Young Children. 3 credits. This course explores key models in elementary school world language programs, i.e., content-based instruction; FLES, FLEX, Immersion, and variations. Students will explore topics in first and second language acquisition relevant to early language learning and design age appropriate thematic units and lessons. This course fulfills the state requirement for PreK-6 LOTE extension.
(New Course) SEYSW 711. Teaching Culture in World Language. 3 credits. An in-depth exploration of teaching culture. Models deriving from anthropology, cultural history, aesthetic education, and intercultural competence (among others) will be examined and discussed. Students will develop units and assessments that examine products, practices, and perspectives of the target culture and will use technology tools for instructor and student learning.

(New Course) SEYSW 704: Interdisciplinary Curriculum for Language Assessment in Secondary School. 3 credits. This course examines standards-based theory and practice for teaching languages in 7-12 schools through interdisciplinary content.

(New Course) SEYSW 712: World Language Program Design: 3 credits. This course examines administrative program needs, requirements, and best practices in designing a vertically articulated, K-12 language program. Standards-based theory and practice, key stakeholders, and assessment systems will be discussed in preparing a performance-based language program across levels, buildings, and schools.

VII. FACULTY.

Describe the existing potential for full-time faculty available to teach in the program. Specify the number of new full-time faculty needed to implement the program and the anticipated number of adjunct faculty that may be required. Be sure to consider how the department will staff its existing offerings when the program is instituted and what impact the staffing of the new program will have on the existing programs. New programs that draw full-time faculty away from established programs are a major consideration for the approval of the proposed program.

The Queens College foreign language education faculty members have expertise preparing language teachers for K-12 programs and in developing curriculum and materials that are standards-based. Our expertise will be a strong foundation for building and strengthening language programs in New York City, Long Island and Westchester schools.

There are currently two full-time faculty members in the program and we have a group of seven well-qualified adjuncts who retired from school districts or college teaching, and have administrative, instructional, and supervision experiences. We anticipate needing two additional full-time language education faculty lines as the program grows. One faculty line will specialize in one of the critical languages. The second faculty member may be from any language background. Initially the program will begin with the two full-time faculty members and cover some of the current courses by our well-qualified adjuncts until enrollments grow.

Nine credits of the MSED program specific to foreign language education will be elements of this program, and six additional credits are offered by the educational psychology and educational foundations programs in SEYS. Therefore we do not anticipate the full-time faculty participation in the regular MSED or initial certification programs to end. Both members are committed to maintaining and strengthening our current offerings as we expand into new needs areas to serve our current and future teacher populations and work with new faculty.

VIII. COST ASSESSMENT.

While all new programs incur expenditures to the college, it is expected that they will generate revenue. The financial impact of a new program on the college is often gauged by comparing anticipated costs with the anticipated revenue. To facilitate and understand the financial impact of the proposed program, each LOI should include a table which shows the cumulative costs and anticipated revenues for the new program during the first five years. Provide a narrative which describes this table and which indicates the source of funding to pay for the costs, including a reallocation of funds. Explain how the college will ensure these funds remain available for at least the first five years of the program’s existence.
The following personnel will be needed to administer the program: a) A full-time faculty line will be required to expand the program, and b) Part-time support staff member 10 hours per week will be needed to work with the proposed program. These costs depend upon faculty salaries offered at Queens College and on the hourly rate given to part-time staff. All costs for the program will be covered from tuition revenues.

The income outlined in the following table is based upon current per credit costs of graduate courses and for an estimated 6 semesters of attendance per candidate to generate student fees. We do not anticipate starting the program until the 2014-2015 school year at the earliest and have prepared a chart on that assumption. A later start date would simply push the years back, but the enrollment and income growth pattern would remain the same.

VII. Summary

The two surveys provide evidence that our current graduate programs in French, Italian, and Spanish still meet school needs in the area. They also indicate that the proposed curriculum and instruction graduate program will meet the needs of the teachers and schools in the NYC area that are not met in our current graduate programs, and will appeal to another audience of candidates in other states within the eastern US. With this cross section of programs Queens College will be able to provide service to more schools in the area which will generate significant income in the next five years. This program additionally reinforces Queens College’s mission and supports Goal 1 of the Queens College Strategic Plan.

Appendix B

Dear colleagues,

The LOTE Division of the Queens College Dept. of Secondary Education and Youth Services (SEYS) is considering creating a post baccalaureate LOTE Certification Program for those persons wishing to become teachers of some of the presently lesser taught languages (for example: Chinese, Arabic, Japanese, German).

The following is a short survey form that will aid Dr. Davis, Program Coordinator, to better ascertain which languages are needed in order for school districts to provide sequences or options for their students. If you or your district is considering introducing a new language into the department curriculum in the near future or wish to begin offering a sequence in a lesser taught language, we would appreciate it if you would kindly take the time to complete the survey below. I will compile the results and submit them to Dr. Davis.

Thank you in advance for your help.
