Archaeological excavation is a very exciting and rewarding endeavor. Exposing an ancient building that has been covered for centuries, or discovering a marble statue that has never been seen before or, unearthing a gold coin that an ancient traveler accidentally and regrettably dropped along the way, contributes to an ever-growing body of knowledge of the past and you have the opportunity to play important part in its recovery, interpretation and preservation.

However, archaeological excavation is also a physically-demanding, arduous endeavor often undertaken in a hot and sunny climate. Before you commit to participate in a dig and in this program, be sure that you are in good physical condition, committed to methodical attention to procedure and detail, and generally, have a good sense of humor and a cooperative attitude.
