Mary Anne Madeira, an assistant professor in the Political Science Department, specializes in international relations, political economy, and the politics of international trade as well as regional integration and the European Union. She is the co-author, with James Caporaso, of Globalization, Institutions and Governance (2011). Her current research focuses on the politics of trade in developed economies.