Resume & Cover Letter Writing Guide

Resumes and cover letters are documents that allows job seekers to highlight their relevant skills, experiences, and interests to a specific role. These documents are NOT a total representation of who you are as a candidate and aren't meant to be a list of everything you've done in the past.

Resumes and Cover letters are tools to communicate how your skills and experience apply to a job, industry, and potential employer, and can open the door to an in-person interview experience that will allow you to further showcase your skills, interest and potential.

The below is meant to be a guide to help you create your resume and cover letter. Please reach out to us at talentnetwork@nyjobsceocouncil.org if you have any questions.

Resume Writing Tips

TIPS	GUIDING NOTES
Emphasize your education	All students currently enrolled in school, and recent grads should list education at the top of their resume. Include your highest level of education, expected graduation date; major(s), minors, relevant coursework, academic achievements, and any specialized training or certifications. GPA, degree, honors, awards, certifications, and online courses. GPA can be listed on your resume if an employer or job requires it, however it is not always necessary to include.
Highlight relevant skills	Identify and emphasize transferable skills that you have acquired through coursework, projects, or extracurricular activities. These might include communication skills, problem-solving abilities, teamwork, time management, leadership, or technical skills. For example, transferable skills such as cash handling and customer service experience gained while working at McDonald's. Moreover, showcase client-facing abilities via babysitting experience interaction with parents and guardians or care for siblings. Leverage your personal and professional network to help you articulate your skills to support your resume development.
Showcase previous work experience including volunteer work and internships	All work experience is valuable to highlight including work-study, full and part-time work in various capacities including retail, hospitality, babysitting because it is an opportunity to showcase your transferable skills. If you do not have professional work experience, include any volunteer work or internships you have undertaken. Or perhaps you served in a leadership role for a group project or with a student association on campus. Highlight the responsibilities, skills, and accomplishments gained during these experiences and emphasize the impact you have made. List these experiences in chronological order with the most recent experience at the top of the resume.
Include relevant projects and coursework	If you have completed any projects or coursework that aligns with the position you are applying for, provide a brief description and highlight the skills or knowledge acquired through those experiences. This is critical if applying for a technical role because employers are looking to see how your technical projects demonstrate the skills that align with the job. Also, you may indicate taken financial courses if you are looking for a job in finance but are not a finance or business major to show your interest and experience.
Mention relevant extracurricular activities	Participation in student clubs, organizations, or activities can show your leadership, teamwork, interests, or organizational skills and should be included in a separate section. Give employers some extra insight into your personality, what motivates you, and what skills you own. Adobe Photoshop, programming languages and social media are examples of skills you can include.
Tailor your resume to the job description	Read the job description carefully and find the key skills and qualifications needed. Customize your resume to highlight how your skills, education, and experiences align with the job requirements. You should have multiple versions of your resume tailored to the types of roles you are applying for.
Keep it concise and well-organized	It is important to keep your resume to one page as a student or a jobseeker with less than ten years of work experience. Use clear headings and bullet points to ensure readability and make it easy for employers to scan your resume quickly. Feel free to tweak the margins as required when formatting, but avoid making significant changes to the font size, maintain it at 10 or 11 points, and avoid using distracting fonts.
Proofread and edit	Finally, review your resume carefully to ensure there are no spelling or grammatical errors . Ask a friend, family member, or mentor to supply feedback and suggestions for improvement. Be consistent in your language and verb tenses throughout the resume. Seemingly minor edits could look like a lack of attention to detail!
