

“They want you to be successful. Even though law school is scary. If we have all these people helping us, then maybe for the next students they won’t be so scared to do it. I didn’t know nobody, but I reached out and made it known that I wanted help. So that’s what it’s all about. People just helping the future students realize that it’s okay to reach out.”

“I have to change the perception of Black men. I also want to change the perception of Black people. You know that we are intelligent. We can do it. You can go through stuff and still be successful. That where you come from doesn’t make you, right? It’s not who you are.”

"It was in the middle of a pandemic, and I had been tossing around law school, but to be honest, I didn't think I was smart enough to go to law school. I was just like, that's not for me, I can't do that. But I just said, yeah, I'm just going to do it, and I'm going to try."
